One Gaiwan

A TEA CIRCLE ON KITH RABBIT

The same leaves never steep twice.

Good tea in good company. We sit down together, pour from one gaiwan, and take a little time to notice what is passing.

A cup from one of our sittings.

THE PATH OF TEA

A sitting, steep by steep.

一

FIRST STEEP

Arriving

Hot water wakes the leaves. Phones face down; the day settles.

二

SECOND STEEP

Opening

The leaves unfurl and the tea finds its voice. Some days we talk; often we just listen.

三

LATER STEEPS

Thinning

Each cup lighter, sweeter, different. Nothing holds still.

四

LAST STEEP

Letting go

The leaves go back to the soil. The afternoon was enough.

One gaiwan, a cup for everyone.

Water · leaf · heat · time. Mostly in Hong Kong, at a long wooden table — sometimes on a boat. No experience needed, only some time.
